Fresh Ranch Butter from the ranch of J. H. White at Wolcott's Cash Store. 3-71

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are made of tough glass that costs four times as much as common glass; and the work on them costs a good deal more than the work on common chimneys, just as the work on a dress is proportioned to cost of stuff.

The dealer is right in saying he can't afford to sell them at the prices of common glass chimneys.

And what will become of his chimney trade if his chimneys never break? He is apt to be wrong there. He can afford to charge a fair price and give new chimneys for all that break in use.

Have a talk with him.

From the Great Pipestone Quarry.

There is much to indicate that the Indians for many generations have highly prized the pipestone for the manufacture of their pipes, and that it has been extensively used by the red man for pipe sculpture throughout North America. Chips of the stone, beads, arrow points, hatchets and pipes of this material have been taken from graves, mounds and wells, even plowed up from fields, in the various states, from Massachusetts to Georgia. The Dakota Indians employ seventy-five different patterns in as many materials, but the calumet is the one venerated. Mr. Edwin A. Barber says: "The fact that this stone has been taken from Indian graves in the state of New York, and that others were found on an ancient site of a village in Georgia, at opposite points, 1,200 miles from the pipestone quarry in Minnesota, reveals the great extent of intercommunication which formerly existed among this North American people. There is certainly strong presumptive evidence that the stone of the Coteau des Prairies has been used for centuries, and perhaps a much longer time."—Helen Strong Thompson in American Magazine.

What Constitutes a Blonde?

Few people understand what constitutes a blonde. Every lady with light hair is not a blonde. The word we get from the French. The adjective blonde, on the authority of Clark, the eminent philologist, is defined as meaning fair, light or flaxen, referring to any object, whereas Simmonds describes a blonde as being "a woman of fair complexion." These definitions are given in Worcester's dictionary. If you will give the matter a moment's thought, you will recall how many ladies have light hair and dark complexions. I venture to say that in all the galaxy of beauty as the Veiled Prophets' ball there were not fifty ladies who came up to the strict requirements of flaxen hair and absolutely fair complexion.—George H. Small in Globe-Democrat.

Superstition Rife Today.

People are wont to boast of the enlightenment of this age and laugh at the superstitions of their forefathers. But it is quite safe to say that superstition is as rife today as it ever was, the only difference being that now people are ashamed to acknowledge their weaknesses. Said a real estate man: "There is nothing which gives a building a lasting black eye quicker than a report that it is or was haunted. The slamming of a door, the rattling of a window, the knocking down of a tin pan by a pussy cat are all the work of ghosts in such buildings. And the worst of it is that people are just as afraid of a new building erected on the site of a haunted one as they are of the haunted one itself."—Buffalo Express.

The Mother in China.

In motherhood alone does the Chinese woman find protection and honor. Yet even here Chinese customs and laws are peculiar, and even grotesque. A mother can claim absolute obedience from her children, even when they are gray-headed and themselves fathers of families, but she is still only a servant and a drudge to her husband. In the event of her death, her sons must, by Chinese law, wear mourning, and go about with unshaven heads for a hundred days; but her husband would render himself an object of ridicule among his friends if he put mourning for her.—Chester Holcombe in Youth's Companion.

The Editor's Responsibility.

The editor, of course, may be a fallible and unilluminated being, greatly in need of having his literary standards revised by those who would bestow on him their aspirations; still, as things go, it is he and not the cloud of contemporary witnesses who is responsible for the conduct of his periodical.—Boston Traveller.

The Hawaiians Disappearing.

The native Hawaiians are said to be disappearing very rapidly, and it will not be long before the race is extinct. Their language is still generally spoken, but as English is the language of the court the native dialect is bound to fall into disuse.—New York Evening World.

James Dewey, a brother of Chauncey, is a prominent business man in Detroit, Mich., and does not care for public or political life, although in other respects he resembles his famous brother.

King Kalakaua is in very poor health. He smokes constantly, and the Hawaiian minister of statistics has never been able to count the number of cigarettes he destroys in twenty-four hours.

F. L. Stanton, the humorous editor of The Smithville (Ga.) News, has accepted an editorial position on The Tribune, of Rome. Mr. Stanton has achieved considerable reputation as a humorous writer.

The emperor of Austria is a great smoker, but he prefers a bad cigar to a good one. He uses the cheap cigars the Vienna cabmen affect. Doubtless he thinks that as a man of rank he ought to smoke rank cigars.

On a lonely road near Sag Harbor, L. I., lives a man who claims to be a brother of Gen. Boulanger. He has been a hermit for years. He is a handsome, courteous Frenchman who seems to have known the world well in other days.

Caleb Foote, the oldest editor in Massachusetts, is about to retire from the editorial chair of The Salem Gazette, which he has filled since 1833. Mr. Foote has been connected with The Gazette for seventy-one years, having entered the office as an apprentice.

Octave Feuillet, overpowered by grief at the death of his son, a young man of 30, has announced to the director of the Gymnase that he cannot write his promised comedy, that his pen is broken, his literary career at an end, his inkstand closed forever, in mourning and desolation.

True to His Calling.
"If they were both intimate friends of yours why didn't you stop the fight? They nearly killed each other."
"I stop the fight? Why, my friend, I'm a newspaper reporter."—The Epoch.
